Study supports hike in tax valuations

By Bill Miller

A study released this week by the Center for Economic Freedom (CEF) suggests that an increase in property tax valuations could have a significant impact on Panola County. The study, which was commissioned by the CEF, examined the effects of property tax valuations on local economies. The findings suggest that an increase in property tax valuations could lead to higher property taxes, which in turn could have a negative impact on businesses and residents. The study also highlights the need for a more equitable and transparent property tax system. The CEF is calling on local leaders to take action to address these issues and promote economic growth in Panola County.

The clinic, which will be held on Saturday, March 21, will offer free rabies vaccinations for both cats and dogs. The clinic is open to all residents of Panola County and is part of the county’s ongoing efforts to prevent the spread of rabies. The event is being organized by the Panola County Health Department in collaboration with local veterinarians. It is important to have your pets vaccinated to ensure their health and the safety of both the pet and its owner.

County eyes auditor change

By Joan Miller

The current auditor in Panola County is nearing the end of his term. The election for the position will be held in November, and it is expected to attract a significant number of candidates. The current auditor has served for several years, and during his tenure, the department has been praised for its efficient and transparent operations. However, some residents have expressed concerns about the current auditor’s ability to handle the demands of the position, and this has led to calls for a change in leadership. The current auditor is also facing legal challenges, which could affect his ability to continue serving in the position. It is unclear whether the current auditor will run for re-election, and the race is expected to be competitive.

Life for a young person can be a boring experience

Rhett Chancellor

Life for a young person can be an exciting experience but for many, it's just a matter of surviving day to day. They go to school, get their homework done, and then go back to school. It's a cycle that can become monotonous and boring.

The lack of extracurricular activities in many schools can contribute to this boredom. Sports teams, clubs, and other organizations can provide opportunities for students to get involved and make friends. Without these activities, many students may feel isolated and unengaged.

The absence of personal guidance can also be a factor. Many students lack the support of teachers and counselors who can help them navigate through their academic and personal challenges. Without this support, students may feel lost and unsure of what to do.

However, there are ways to combat the boredom of life for a young person. Participating in sports or clubs, getting involved in community service, and seeking out mentors can all help to make life more interesting and fulfilling. With the right support and opportunities, young people can find meaning and purpose in their lives.

Girl Scout Week underway

Since its founding 75 years ago, Girl Scout Week has served many women in becoming involved in their own personal community, impacting others through volunteer work.

Throughout the United States on March 12, 1912, the theme was changed to Girl Scouts and the organization moved its headquarters from Washington, D.C. to New York City. The theme for this year is "With Peace and Good Will." The theme was chosen because it represents the best of what Girl Scout Week is about: the power of good deeds for the betterment of the world.

Girl Scout Week is an annual celebration that acknowledges the contributions of Girl Scouts and their impact on society. It is a time to reflect on the achievements of Girl Scouts and the opportunities they present for young girls to develop their leadership skills, gain confidence, and make meaningful contributions to their communities.

Girl Scouts, now girl scouts, is a global organization that empowers girls and young women to be leaders, role models, and agents of change. The organization has been instrumental in promoting the growth and development of girls and young women, and it continues to play a vital role in shaping the future of young girls.

Girl Scout Week is an opportunity to recognize the contributions of Girl Scouts and to celebrate the impact they have on communities around the world. It is a time to reflect on the progress made in empowering girls and young women and to build momentum for continued success in the future.
