State lawmakers to review myriad of issues soon

By James M. King

Riverbank, Calif. - For the third time in two years, Washington lawmakers will consider revisiting a federal tax-exempt status for a group of nonprofit organizations that help people in need.

The legislation, known as the Taxpayer Relief Act of 2021, would allow these organizations to receive tax-free donations for tax purposes, a provision that has been in place since 1980.

But critics say the law has been used to funnel money to political groups and lobbying firms, and that it should be reformed to ensure that donations are used for legitimate charitable purposes.

"The public has lost faith in these groups," said Rep. Jim Cooper, D-Tenn., who chairs the House Ways and Means Committee. "They've been chasing the money, and not the mission."

The bill is expected to be considered by the House Ways and Means Committee this week, and could be voted on as early as next week.

Editorial:

Holiday helping hands: have the right stuff

By John S. Faison

For the first time in two years, the holiday season has brought with it a sense of normalcy. With more people out and about, and businesses open, there's a palpable sense of hope.

But with hope comes responsibility. As we celebrate the season, it's important to remember that there are still many in need.

That's why we're proud to support the Salvation Army's Red Kettle campaign, which raises funds to help provide meals, clothing, shelter and other basic necessities to those in our community who need them.

We urge everyone to do their part to support this important cause. It's a small gesture, but one that can make a big difference in someone's life.

(Reader's name: Public Media) asked about the history of public radio. The earliest public radio station, KDKA in Pittsburgh, started broadcasting in 1920. Since then, public radio has grown to include a wide range of programming, including news, music, education and more.

Many people have contributed to the development of public radio. One key figure is Orson Welles, who used his influence to promote public radio as a means of education and social change.

Another important period was the 1980s, when public radio began to diversify and offer more programming options. Today, public radio is an important source of information and entertainment for millions of people across the country.

Only turkeys aren't thankful

By Sarah L. Johnson

Thanksgiving is a holidays that's all about giving thanks. But when it comes to turkeys, the feeling isn't always mutual.

The traditional holiday bird is often overlooked in favor of other foods, like turkey or stuffing. But turkeys have their own unique traditions and customs.

For example, in Turkey, turkeys are often given as gifts during the holiday season. And in some parts of the world, turkeys are considered a delicacy and are rarely consumed.

But whether you're a turkey or not, there's no denying that Thanksgiving is a special time of year.

Miller-Bray exchange vows

Don Miller and Loversly and Mike Bray were married in a double-ring ceremony on Nov. 2, 1988, at the Bankhead Church of Christ in Carthage. The couple exchanged vows in a traditional Greek ceremony, a union of their families and the presence of their friends. The bride, Loversly, was escorted by her father into the church, where she wore a white gown designed by Nellie Nolen. The groom, Mike Bray, was accompanied by his father as he entered the church. The couple exchanged rings and vows, promising to love each other through thick and thin. The ceremony was officiated by Rev. John Miller, who blessed the couple and pronounced them husband and wife.
